

O Mundo “Bean to Bar” nos Estados Unidos

©2022 Clay Gordon / TheChocolateLife
Image ©Clay Gordon, Fazenda Venturosa (Bahia, 2017)

The Early Years: 1996 - 2006

The first ten years saw small growth in the number of makers in the US – from 1 in 1996 to fewer than about a dozen by 2006.

2001 saw the launch of two important online efforts: seventypercent.com and chocophile.com

2004 saw the launch of chocolatealchemy.com and the expansive growth of small chocolate makers began.

The modern bean to bar movement started in the United States in 1996.

It was founded by Bob Steinberg and Robert Scharffenberger, who coined the term “bean to bar” to distinguish it from confectionery chocolate

John came out of the sparkling wine industry and wanted to create the American version of Valrhona chocolate.

For the first five years Scharffen Berger did not make any single origin chocolates – John’s background was as a champagne blender.

I became interested in what we now call bean to bar chocolate when I was introduced to Bonnat single-origin chocolate in 1994.

2006 - 2016

During the middle period, the most influential early name in bean to bar chocolate in the US – and the world – splashed on to the scene: Mast Brothers.

(They would effectively be out of the market by the end of this period.)

Late 2007/early 2008 saw the introduction of TCHO Chocolate, with investment by the founders of Wired Magazine.

2011 saw the introduction of another important maker: Dandelion Chocolate.

By the end of 2016 there were well over 200 small makers in the United States alone – no one knows exactly how many.

The Present: 2016 - Today

The number of makers globally exploded. My personal estimate is over 2500 based on the numbers of new makers I see weekly in my social media feeds.

In a mature market, about 40% is North America (US, Canada, Mexico) which adds up to 800-1000 small makers, which sounds about right.

What surprised me most about COVID over the past 2+ years is how few established makers went out of business.

Chaves Para o Futuro do Brasil

Key things to think about for the future – for the US, Brazil, and elsewhere.

Language

Awareness

Community

Diversity

Impact

Flavor

Perguntas?

claygordon@thechocolatelifelife.com

TheChocolateLife.com